Weather Status:	TODAY: Storm Eowyn will bring gale to storm force southwest to west winds for a time yet today, with destructive and damaging gusts. Violent storm force to hurricane force winds will occur for a time too in coastal areas of the west and north. While the winds will gradually abate from the south, it will remain very windy in northern areas until evening time. Sunny spells and scattered squally showers will follow this afternoon, merging to longer spells of rain in the north with hail and local lightning. Highest afternoon temperatures of 5 to 8 degrees but feeling much colder due to wind-chill. TONIGHT: Southwest to west winds will moderate tonight. Winds will decrease light southerly or variable with frost and icy patches setting in. Scattered showers will follow, especially across west and north areas, some of hail, sleet and snow, mainly confined to northwest areas later with long clear spells developing. Cold with lowest temperatures of -2 to +2 degrees. https://www.met.ie/forecasts/national-forecast
